The Plainfield Area NAACP has worked to add the Trumbauer Abele Greenhouse in Somerset County NJ to the 10 Most Endangered List in NJ. The greenhouse located on the Duke Farms estate was designed by renowed architect Julian Abele. The Trumbauer Abele greenhouse is falling in disrepair. It is a beautiful, massive structure. Breathtaking.

It takes about 15 minutes to walk to it - only hearty people can make it. There is a tram that can be taken to the hay barn area, and then it would be about a five minute walk to the Trumbauer/Abele greenhouse.

In 1775, 11% of New Jersey's population was slaves. In general, African-Americans' burials were not permitted in the burying grounds or cemeteries of churches. Slaves were often buried away from family burying grounds in unmarked graves. In 1801, Bedminster landowner and slave owner, Aaron Melick, sold a $66' \times 66'$ plot of land to three black men (one freed black man and two slaves) for the purpose of burying their dead with a bit more dignity. The land cost the three men exactly \$3.00.

Of the three black men who purchased the property the two slaves were "Rick," who belonged to Aaron Melick, and "Zaff," who belonged to Aaron Van Dorn. The one purchaser who was freed black man was Robert Aaron. While not much is known yet about "Rick" or "Zaff," historian, Nancy Piwowar, recently discovered Robert Aaron's will.

It turns out that Robert Aaron died a short time after the purchase of the African Slave Burying Ground. His will was proved March 2, 1802, in Somerset County. The records did not include a date of death. However, there was an inventory what he left behind which totaled $115.84 in (1802) value. The first item on the inventory list was one cow, valued at $12.00. Next there were 7 hives of bees valued at $20.00. Other items listed included kitchen utensils, farm utensils and furniture. The working bee hives and other "bee hive items" totaled 19% of Robert Aaron's inventory at the time of his death. Not much is known about NJ's early 18th century bee industry, but this is evidence that Robert Aaron is the earliest documented beekeeper in New Jersey!

The marker was formally dedicated on Wednesday, June 22, 2016
